

Corrigendum

Corrigendum to “Associations between maternal plasma measurements of inflammatory markers and urinary levels of phenols and parabens during pregnancy: A repeated measures study”
[Sci. Total Environ. 650 (Pt 1) (2019) 1131–1140]

M.T. Aung^a, K.K. Ferguson^{a,b}, D.E. Cantonwine^c, K.M. Bakulski^d, B. Mukherjee^{d,e}, R. Loch-Caruso^a,
T.F. McElrath^c, J.D. Meeker^{a,*}

^a Department of Environmental Health Sciences, University of Michigan School of Public Health, Ann Arbor, MI, United States

^b Epidemiology Branch, National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences, Research Triangle Park, NC, United States

^c Division of Maternal and Fetal Medicine, Brigham and Women's Hospital, Harvard Medical School, Boston, MA, United States

^d Department of Epidemiology, University of Michigan School of Public Health, Ann Arbor, MI, United States

^e Department of Biostatistics, University of Michigan School of Public Health, Ann Arbor, MI, United States

The authors regret an error that resulted in the reverse-coding of fetal sex. In Table 1 we present the n(%) of the population that is carrying a male vs. a female fetus as well as the maternal urinary phenol/paraben concentrations by sex of the fetus. The labeling of these rows is reversed.

DOI of original article: <https://doi.org/10.1016/j.scitotenv.2018.08.356>.

* Corresponding author.

E-mail address: meekerj@umich.edu (J.D. Meeker).