Reprints of individual articles are available only from the authors.

It is a condition of publication in the journal that authors assign copyright to the Association of Schools of Public Health (ASPH). This ensures that requests from third parties to reproduce articles are handled efficiently and consistently and will also allow the article to be as widely disseminated as possible. Although assigning copyright, authors may use their own material in other publications provided that the journal is acknowledged as the original place of publication and Oxford University Press is notified in writing and in advance.

Material published in this journal may be used, modified, reproduced, and distributed by the US government for government purposes.

Public Health Reports is printed on acid-free paper that meets the minimum requirements of ANSI Standard Z39.48-1984 (Permanence of Paper).

Oxford University Press is a department of the University of Oxford. It furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education by publishing worldwide.

Writing for Public Health Reports

We welcome contributions that help us meet the information needs of public health professionals by describing important scientific and programmatic developments; new technologies; relevant policy issues; and current scientific debates.

In general, the journal conforms to Uniform Requirements for Manuscripts Submitted to Biomedical Journals (Public Health Rep 1997;112:253-63), available on-line at www.acponline.org/journals/annals/01jan97/unifreqr.htm.

Submit manuscripts to: Public Health Reports, JFK Federal Building., Room 1855, Boston MA 02203; tel. 617-565-1440.

Contributions and Their Length

Letters to the Editor. We welcome and encourage letters; brevity is a virtue.

News and Notes: These are brief news items and announcements, used and rewritten at the discretion of the editors. 500-word maximum.

Feature articles: Features, often solicited, present the current status of a subject area and implications for policy, practice, or future research. Include a 150-word unstructured synopsis.

Research articles: We seek to publish research that is fully developed and original. To avoid redundant publishing, we do not accept preliminary reports or reports of studies that are only incrementally different from previously published research. Include a structured synopsis (Objectives, Methods, Results, Conclusions) of up to 250 words.

Practice articles: We publish articles describing innovative public health programs and initiatives, their current status, and documented outcomes. Include a 150-word unstructured synopsis.

Viewpoints and Commentaries: These are short opinion pieces, often solicited, addressing contemporary public health issues. Commentaries are written in response to Feature, Practice, or Research articles.

Departments: Overseas Observer, Public Health and the Law, Information Technology, Public Health Chronicles, Book and Film Reviews. We welcome letters of inquiry proposing article ideas.

Conflicts of Interest

Full disclosure and avoiding the appearance of a conflict are our guiding principles. If any financial influence or other conflict of interest might have biased your work, you are obliged to disclose it to us—even if you are confident that no bias intervened. Please let us decide what should be disclosed to our readers. Similarly, you must disclose any similar or related work submitted or published elsewhere.

Cover Letter

When submitting your manuscript, include a statement that the material has not been published nor is being considered for publication elsewhere. Please submit three copies of the text (double-spaced), tables, and figures.

Acknowledgment of Receipt

We acknowledge each submission when it arrives.

Peer Review

After an initial reading by our editors, we select promising contributions for peer review; these are sent to two or more external reviewers.

The Manuscript

Here's what your manuscript should look like:

Title Page. (a) title (short and descriptive); (b) full names of all authors, including their graduate degrees; (c) all authors' institutional affiliations and job titles during the course of the research (and current affiliations and titles if different); (d) name, street address, telephone number, and fax number and e-mail address of corresponding author; (e) word count of the text (inclusive of references) and the number of charts/figures.

Synopsis: The abstract is your work's face to the world, as published in various medical indexes; a good abstract promotes readership. Synopses of Feature and Practice articles should be a maximum of 150 words without abbreviations, symbols, or references to tables or graphs. Structured synopses of Research articles (250-word maximum) should contain four parts labeled Objectives, Methods, Results, and Conclusions. Below the abstract provide up to 10 key words (use Medical Subject Headings from Index Medicus).

Text. In writing for PHR, keep in mind that public health is an extremely broad field and most readers will be in parts of the field other than your own. Your introduction or lead is particularly important. Please define terms that are not universally understood and avoid the use of jargon.

Research articles should be divided into four sections: Introduction, Methods, Results, Discussion. In the Methods section, use active, not passive, voice and tell readers "who, what, when, where, and why." Provide a full explanation in the Methods section of how you arrived at each finding reported in the Results section.

References. Please consult the Uniform Requirements and recent issues of the journal. Citations of personal conversations or unpublished material should appear in the text. PHR does not use substantive footnotes.

Copyright

Authors assign copyright to the Association of Schools of Public Health. Authors may use their own material in other publications provided PHR is acknowledged as the original place of publication and Oxford University Press is notified in writing and in advance.
